
Labor & Employment Law Daily Wrap Up

Click to open document in a browser

By Kerry Martin, J.D., and Letitia Silas, J.D.

Fisher Phillips attorneys address the complexities of labor relations in the context of working during the COVID-19 pandemic.

From bargaining negotiations and management rights, through return to work and protected concerted activity, managing labor relations has always required skill, tact, and a deep understanding of the law. Now, however, the unique challenges of managing in a COVID-19 environment—with no clear end in sight—have greatly complicated many aspects of the relationship between management and employees—whether or not the workplace is unionized.

In their article, "Managing labor relations in a COVID-19 environment," Fisher Phillips partners Kerry Martin and Letitia Silas answer a handful of questions posed by Labor & Employment Law Daily addressing these labor relations challenges.

Attorneys: Kerry Martin, J.D., and Letitia Silas (Fisher Phillips).